

WOMEN, BUSINESS AND HUMAN RIGHTS

A COURSE ON ENSURING A GENDER LENS IN THE FUTURE OF BUSINESS

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS

The future of businesses is inclusive. Without applying a gender lens to understand the impact of business policies and practices, leadership will be unable to attract or retain talent, identify future managers, and eliminate discriminatory practices. This has an impact on a company's legal compliance, profitability, and reputation.

United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in collaboration with Gender at Work, is offering a course that aims to introduce participants to the linkages between women, business, and human rights.

Participants will be encouraged to critically examine several questions such as the human rights responsibilities of businesses and the impact of business activities on women, and will explore how all stakeholders – including government, civil society and business – can better contribute to achieve the UN mission of "50:50 by 2030".

The course – a blend of theory and practical guidance – will equip participants with the skills to develop strategies and assess business operations that are consistent with international standards on gender rights. It will be offered on Gender at Work's recently launched learning platform, the Gender at Work Institute.

The workshop will launch on 13 December, with weekly sessions commencing on 28 January to 25 February 2022.
